1942 CLUB

1976-1988

The 1942 Club was founded in 1942 by Harold Himsworth, Harry Platt and other Heads of Academic Departments to discuss the possible impact of the proposed National Health Service on the future of academic medicine. It developed into a "think tank" for professors of clinical or paraclinical departments to discuss and produce reports on academic medicine in all clinical and paraclinical disciplines. It has a limited membership which is by election. The Club meets twice yearly.

ACTION LEARNING MOVEMENT

1969-2000

This group of papers documents Butterfield's interest and support for R.W. Revans's management philosophy 'Action Learning', particularly with reference to the National Health Service. Butterfield first came into contact with Revans at Guy's Hospital where he led The Hospital Internal Communications (HIC) Project, 1965-1968. The papers principally document Butterfield's later interest in Action Learning (from the late 1980s). He was in regular contact with Revans and his supporters in Britain and overseas, invited to join the Steering Committee of the International Centre of Action Learning in 1991, and involved in the organisation of an International Action Learning Congress (held 17-25 April 1995), facilitated contacts between Revans and his supporters and the UK Ministry of Health, etc.

Butterfield wrote his own definition of Action Learning in January 1996 (F.25):

'Action Learning was the term introduced by pioneer Professor Reg Revans to describe his work for the Coal Board encouraging Pit Managers to take control of their enterprises by learning together on the job and exchanging experiences.

I... The words now reflect a code word for the application of a sort of social microscope which can be focussed on a situation under consideration, to look in detail at the circumstances which obtain and which need "sorting out" to improve the situation'.

The papers were found under the general title 'Action Learning'.

AGE ACTION YEAR 1976

1972-1978

Age Action Year 1976 was a national campaign to improve the quality of life of the aged by means of research into the ageing process, by encouraging retired people to become more self-sufficient and by stimulating voluntary efforts in the welfare field. It was launched at the Guildhall by the Lord Mayor of London on 10 November 1975. Butterfield was a member of the National Executive Committee. Arising from the Age Action Year, the Age Action Trust set up a British Foundation for Age Research, also known by the shorter title Age Research. See F.102-F.126.

The title Foundation for Age Research was also used subsequently (1983), becoming by 1988 Research into Ageing. The purpose of the Foundation was to stimulate and sponsor scientific research into ageing and the aged so that greater knowledge could lead to the relief of the many physical and social problems of old age. Butterfield was a Governor and Trustee of the Charity, member of the Management Committee of the Foundation and member of the Research Advisory Committee.	1979-1997 general practice training and research centre and was involved in the planning of medical services with local government and regional national health service authorities. The project was seen as offering unique opportunities for studying many of the problems facing the National Health Service.

Dr Robert Smith of the Medical Research Department of the Wellcome Foundation came to the Guy's Department of Medicine to work on the planning of the 'proposed Guy's / Greenwich Housing Estate [later Thamesmead] G.P. Project'. Funding was obtained from the Nuffield Foundation towards establishing a General Practice Research Unit [GPRU] within the Department of Medicine at Guy's led by Smith. This would consider the organising and integrating of the medical care of the more than 50,000 people who were going to live there.
