GENERAL INTRODUCTION

PROVENANCE

The papers were received from the Library, Department of Plant Sciences, University of Cambridge, 13 January 2009.

OUTLINE OF THE CAREER OF SIR ARTHUR GEORGE TANSLEY

Arthur George Tansley was born in London on 15 August 1871. He was educated at a preparatory school in Worthing, Sussex, 1883-1886 and Highgate School, London where the teaching of science was 'faricically inadequate', 1886 to the beginning of 1889 when he left school to attend classes at University College London, listening to the lectures of R. Lankester, W. Ramsey and F.W. Oliver. In October 1890 he entered Trinity College Cambridge to read for the Natural Sciences Tripos. After taking Part I of the Natural Sciences Tripos in 1893 he was invited by Oliver to join him as assistant in the Botany Department, University College London with the result that he spent 1893-1894 teaching in London and preparing for Part II of the Tripos at Cambridge which he took in May and June 1894. Tansley's association with Oliver lasted 13 years until he was appointed Lecturer in Botany in Cambridge in 1907. During his time at University College London he visited Ceylon and the Malay Peninsula 1900-1901 and founded a new botanical journal The New Phytologist in 1902 which he continued to edit to 1931.

In Cambridge Tansley's interests turned increasingly to plant ecology, and as these interests grew he became a mainstay of British ecology and one of its acknowledged leaders worldwide. A light lecturing commitment left free the season from Easter to October for work in the field, and he organised and conducted many student excursions in such areas as the Norfolk Broads, the New Forest, the Forest of Dean and the Malvern District. In this way he acquired a considerable knowledge of the vegetation of different parts of Great Britain. In 1911 Tansley organised the first International Phytogeographical Excursion in the British Isles, inviting a number of European and American botanists interested in phytogeography to visit selected localities in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland over a number of weeks. Partly to help the foreign visitors unfamiliar with British vegetation, a small book, Types of British Vegetation, largely written by Tansley, was published in 1911. This was the first systematic account of British vegetation, as distinct from flora. A second International Phytogeographical Excursion followed in the USA in 1913 and it was subsequently decided to make these excursions a permanent institution. In 1904 at Tansley's initiative a small body had been formed consisting of a number of British botanists who were especially interested in British vegetation: the Central Committee for the Survey and Study of British Vegetation, afterwards shortened to British Vegetation Committee. In 1913 the Committee gave way to the British Ecological Society with a membership open to anyone interested in ecology at large, of both plants and animals, and Tansley served as its first President. At the same time the Journal of Ecology was founded as the organ of the new society, and Tansley served as its editor, 1917-1937.

During the First World War Tansley became interested in psychology. He was greatly attracted to the work of Sigmund Freud, seeking to assimilate Freudian concepts with biological principles. At the end of the war he attempted an English presentation of his understanding of what psychological teaching signified in terms of biology and daily life. Tansley's The new psychology and its relation to life was published in 1920 and enjoyed a considerable success with professional psychologists and the wider public in Britain and overseas. In 1923 he resigned his university lectureship in botany and spent 1923-1924 studying with Freud in Vienna.

After a period without an academic position Tansley accepted an invitation to apply for the vacant Sherardian Chair of Botany at Oxford. Elected in January 1927 he held the Chair for ten and a half years (with a fellowship of Magdalen College), retiring as Emeritus Professor in 1937. He infused new life into the Oxford botanical department, making himself responsible for a considerable programme of lectures and field work. He also embarked on a substantial book, an expanded version of his earlier Types of British vegetation, which appeared in 1939 as The British Islands and their vegetation and secured the author the Linnean Society's Gold Medal in 1941.

In retirement Tansley was able to take on a good deal of public service which ultimately led to the establishment of the Nature Conservancy. His nature conservation interests were, however, of long standing. In 1913 he had accepted an invitation to join the Society for the Promotion of Nature Reserves (founded a year earlier by Charles Rothschild) and serve on its Council. In 1942 the Council of the British Ecological Society appointed a committee (chaired by Tansley) on 'Nature Conservation and Nature Reserves', whose report was published in the Society's journals in 1944. In 1945 the Minister of Town and Country Planning appointed a Nature Reserves Investigation Committee, and as an adjunct to it a Wild Life Conservation Special Committee of which Tansley was Vice-Chairman and in fact Acting Chairman for most of its existence, 1945-1947. When the Nature Conservancy was established by Royal Charter in 1949, Tansley was appointed chairman, a position he held until 1953 when resigned, mainly owing to increasing deafness. Other public service included work for the National Trust and his Presidency of the Council for the Promotion of Field Studies, 1949-1953. He continued to publish, for example a semi-popular book to support the conservation movement Our heritage of wild nature in 1945 and a shorter popular presentation of his big book on British Isles and their vegetation which appeared in 1949 as Britain's green mantle. Other activities of his later years included his Herbert Spencer Lecture at Oxford in 1942 on 'The values of science to humanity': he had corresponded with Spencer as a young man, 1895-1896; and his active support of the Society for Freedom in Science.

Tansley was elected FRS in 1915 and knighted in 1950. He died at Grantchester near Cambridge, 25 November 1955.

The preceding account draws on H. Godwin's 'Arthur George Tansley 1871-1955', Biographical Memoirs of Fellows of The Royal Society, Volume 3, November 1957.

DESCRIPTION OF THE COLLECTION

The archive covers the period 1854-2008. A characteristic of the archive are the inscriptions and explanatory notes provided by the botanist and ecologist Sir Harry Godwin (1901-1985), Professor and Head of the Botany Department at Cambridge, 1960-1968.

Section A, Biographical, includes a collection of writings about Tansley and his work which was kept with his archive in the Plant Sciences Library at Cambridge. These writings include the memoirs written by H. Godwin for the Royal Society and the British Ecological Society and his 1976 Tansley lecture. There is a little material relating to Tansley's education and career including articles written by Tansley for his school magazine, 1883-1884, his essay in candidature for the Arnold Gerstenberg Studentship, University of Cambridge, 1896, his 'Diary kept in the East 1900-01' and his application (abandoned) for the Professorship of Botany, University of Sydney, 1912. Miscellaneous biographical items include a little material about his medical condition at the end of his life and a postcard from his widow at 100. A small number of photographs includes 'Sir Arthur Tansley on Knoll Hill, nr. Corfe Castle, Dorset 8 April 1954'.

Section B, Notes and notebooks, presents a major chronological sequence of notebooks used by Tansley for field notes, 1893-1937. The notebooks were used in diverse locations throughout the British Isles, in Europe, especially France and Scandinavia, North Africa, and the USA in connexion with the 1913 International Phytogeographic Excursion. There are also miscellaneous notes, drafts and data relating to Tansley's botanical and ecological interests found in a variety of containers with explanatory inscriptions. These include 'Early notes on Plant Anatomy / Plankton / Amentiferae', 1894-1903, 'Norfolk Broads Maps. Notes etc Lecture The Physical Features of the Norfolk Broads', 1903-[?1910], 'Quadrats Crockham Hill [Kent] Devon Branscombe Kent - Tunbridge Wells', n.d.1905-1909, and 'Charts of Fritillaries etc in Magdalen [College, Oxford] Meadow', 1929-1933.

Section C, Psychology, comprises a notebook titled 'The New Psychology Press Cuttings Letters' and miscellaneous manuscript and typescript notes and drafts. The notebook was used for pasting letters and press-cuttings relating to Tansley's book, The new psychology and its relation to life, London: Allen & Unwin, 1920. The miscellaneous papers include a typescript draft of a symposium contribution on 'The Historical Foundations of Psychology', manuscript notes for a lecture titled 'On Criticisms of Freudian Theory' and Tansley's manuscript copy of 'Letter from Freud on Breuer's "Anna O". 20 Nov. 1932.'

Section D, Publications, comprises a chronological sequence of Tansley's own publications, 1898-1953, correspondence and papers relating to publications, 1913-1978, and a small group of publications by others, 1918-1939. Tansley's own publications are represented mostly by offprints or similar published texts, the principal exception being the substantial documentation relating to The British Islands and their Vegetation, first published by Cambridge University Press in 1939, including letters found in Tansley's own copy and 'Data for Revision 1954-5'. The great bulk of the correspondence and papers relating to publications concerns two large scale projects initiated in the 1930s which did not come to fruition: the 'National Atlas of Great Britain and Northern Ireland' and the 'New Students' British Flora'. Tansley was a member of the National Atlas Committee and convened the British Ecological Society National Atlas SubCommittee, and was one of the editors of the proposed British Flora with J.S.L. Gilmour and A.J. Wilmott. The Journal of Ecology is represented by the 1913 memorandum of agreement between Cambridge University Press and Tansley on behalf of the British Ecological Society.

Section E, Lectures and broadcasts, presents invitation and public lectures, 1896-1955 and university teaching, 1909-1937, including undated material. Tansley talked on a wide range of botanical and ecological topics to diverse audiences including pioneering adult education institutions in London such as the Working Men's College and Morley College, scientific societies such as the British Ecological Society and the Botanical Society of the British Isles and university societies such as the Cambridge University Natural Sciences Club and the Newnham Science Club, Cambridge. The great bulk of the university teaching material relates to courses given while Tansley was Professor of Botany at Oxford University, 1927-1937, including forestry and ecology lectures. The broadcast material comprises 12 duplicated typescript 'as broadcast' scripts for a series of BBC radio talks on 'Man's Place in Nature' broadcast, October-December 1942. The talks were given by A.M. Carr-Saunders, C. Daryll Forde, A.V. Hill, Sir James Jeans and D.M.S. Watson. Tansley does not appear to have given a talk and his contribution to the series, if any, is not clear.

Section F, Societies and organisations, presents papers relating to six such bodies, 1913-1977: British Ecological Society, Magdalen College Oxford Philosophy Club, National Union of Scientific Workers, Nature Conservancy, Society for Freedom in Science and Society for the Promotion of Nature Reserves. The bulk of the societies and organisations material relates to Tansley's nature conservation interests. There are correspondence and papers including maps relating to the foundation of the Society for the Promotion of Nature Reserves and its acquisition of reserves, 1913-1945. The British Ecological Society papers relate to its Nature Conservation and Nature Reserves Committee, which Tansley chaired, and its preparation of a report on nature conservation and reserves for the Society during the Second World War. A number of explanatory notes by H. Godwin are dated in 1977. A folder of maps of nature reserves appears to relate to the work of the Scientific Policy Committee of the Nature Conservancy, 1954-1955. The only other significant group of papers relates to the Magdalen Philosophy Club: principally typescript drafts relating to papers given to the Club by Tansley and others including the zoologist and neurophysiologist J.Z. Young.

Section G, Visits and conferences, presents papers relating to only three expeditions and one conference over the extended period, 1905-1955. Almost all the material relates to the International Phytogeographic Excursion in the USA, August and September, 1913 including excursion programmes for the six sections of the expedition, press-cuttings and photographs.

Section H, Correspondence, covers an extensive period, 1854-1955, though the earliest correspondence, 1854-1855, might best be described as kept with the Tansley archive rather than integral to it. There is a chronological sequence of correspondence, 1901-1955, which includes single letters or very small numbers of letters from leading botanists and ecologists from the first half of the twentieth-century, including F.F. Blackman, V.H. Blackman, F.O. Bower, L. Cockayne, H. Godwin, E.M. Nicholson, F.W. Oliver, W.G. Smith, D.T. Gwynne-Vaughan and A.S. Watt. Correspondence presented by named individuals features two correspondents: the philosopher Herbert Spencer with whom Tansley corresponded as a young man, 1895-1896 and the pioneering American ecologist F.E. Clements, 1905-1952. The bulk of the Clements' correspondence is from his period as head of the botany department at the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis (to 1917) and the final letters in the sequence are from Clements' widow: he died in 1945. Under the heading 'Miscellaneous' are presented groups of letters and sometimes related papers found in a number of folders and an envelope. The 1854-1855 correspondence was found in an envelope inscribed 'Building Laboratories 1854' and 'Downing St site' and comprises correspondence from heads of colleges to the Vice-Chancellor, University of Cambridge, about contributions towards the fund for the erection of additional lecture rooms and museums in the university. The other groups are 'English Veg[etatio]n Various. Notes. Lists, Letters', predominantly correspondence 1907-1921; 'Miscellaneous letters etc.', 1923-1952, including letters from A.S. Watt; and 'Valuable letters on Botanical Topics', 1928-1937, including letter and data from J. Braun-Blanquet and letters from A. Arber, F.E. Clements and A.S. Watt.

There is also an index of correspondents.

3 copies.
- A.15 Paper on 'The Genus Potentilla' read by Tansley to the Westbury House Science Institute, 'Ephemeris', January 1884
1884

Tansley also features in this number of 'Ephemeris' as the setter of a 'diamond' puzzle and under results of examinations, December 1883.
- A.16 Paper on 'The Artificial and Natural Systems of Classification', 'Ephemeris', n.d. 1883-1884

Biographical, A.1-A.31

- A.17 'Natural Selection Considered as a Special Example of the General Principle of Evolution', Tansley's essay in candidature for the Arnold Gerstenberg Studentship, University of Cambridge 1896
- 73pp typescript with manuscript marginal comment.
- A.18 'Diary kept in the East 1900-01' 1900-1901
- The 'diary' appears to be made up of at least two parts in a single wrapper so inscribed. There are no other covers.
- Tansley visited Ceylon and Malaya. The 'diary' runs from 30 September when he landed in Colombo to 30 November 1900, and then from 23 February when he left Penang to 4 May 1901 when he arrived back in England. The gap in the record is essentially the period of his visit to Malaya. The return journey included a visit to Egypt.
- A.18A Letter from W.H. Lang to H. Godwin, 8 January 1956, re Tansley's visit to Malaya 1956
- Lang's letter was a response to an enquiry from Godwin, presumably in connexion with Godwin's work on the memoir of Tansley for the Royal Society (A.5).
- A.19-A.20 Professorship of Botany, University of Sydney 1912
- Manuscript draft of Tansley's application with testimonials by F.F. Blackman and F.W. Oliver.
- 2 folders.
- Tansley abandoned his application.
- A.21 Letter of thanks for service as Chairman of the Nature Conservancy, 28 January 1953 1953

Biographical, A.1-A.31

A.22, A.23 Early botanical and ecological books belonging to Tansley 1875-1888

A.22 'Elementary Lessons in Botanical Geography' by J.G. Baker, London, 1875 1875, 1886
Inscribed inside at the front 'A.G. Tansley December 25th 1886'

A.23 'Factors of Organic Evolution' by Herbert Spencer, reprinted, with additions, from The Nineteenth Century, 1887 1888
Inscribed at the front 'A.G. Tansley 1888'.
At the back in envelope are notes by Tansley with explanatory note by H. Godwin: 'A.G. Tansley's own notes on Herbert Spencer's book 'Factors of Organic Evolution' inscribed '1888' & found inside his copy in 1975'.

A.23A 'Zur Erläuterung des Grossen Reliefs am National-Denkmal auf dem Niederwald' 1896
Print published in Dresden, 1896

A.24 Letter from Tansley's physician, Philip Grey, with opinion and advice on Tansley's medical condition, 8 October 1955, with notice of vacancy for Tansley in the private wards at Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, 11 October 1955 1955
The letter has a manuscript addition by H. Godwin 'As Sir Arthur Tansley died in October 1955, it seems likely that his death was associated with the deterioration here described by Mr Grey (1980)'.
In fact Tansley died on 25 November 1955.

Biographical, A.1-A.31

- A.25 Postcard from Tansley's widow, Edith to H. Godwin, 4 November 1969 1969
With pencil addition by ?Godwin '(aetat 100)'.
- A.26 Typescript note beginning 'A Diamond riddle set by Tansley in 1884 in his school magazine ...' found clipped together with a photocopy of a 1919 letter from F.E. Clements 1987
With post-it note 'BES 12/1987 Cambridge Poster'.
- A.27-A.28 Correspondence and papers re the Tansley archive at the Department of Plant Sciences, University of Cambridge. 1969-2008
2 folders.
In 1969 an approach to H. Godwin by R.E.W. Maddison as 'Editor' of the Royal Society / Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts Standing Joint Committee for Scientific and Technological Records may have led to the assembling of Tansley archival material at the Botany School (later Department of Plant Sciences), University of Cambridge.

A total of 288 prints in the British Ecological Society collection are derived from photographs taken by Tansley at various locations in Britain and overseas, the earliest dating from 1897.

SECTION B NOTES AND NOTEBOOKS, B.1-B.86 1893-1950

B.1-B.65A NOTEBOOKS

B.66-B.86 MISCELLANEOUS NOTES, DRAFTS
AND DATA

B.1-B.65A NOTEBOOKS 1893-1950

A chronological sequence of notebooks predominantly used by Tansley for botanical and ecological field notes.

Most of the notebooks are labelled on the front cover with location(s) and dates. These 'titles' where available form the basis of the catalogue entries. Some notebooks are used for work at one location or closely related locations over a short span of time, others may be used for a number of diverse locations across a span of years. Tansley, from the late 1920s onwards, adopted the practice of keeping loose sheets from notebooks within labelled covers and these sheets of notes in labelled covers have been treated as notebooks for the purpose of compiling this sequence.

B.1 Untitled 1893

Notes of experiments and field work including geological sections. One page dated 11 September 1893 (Goyts Valley, Derbyshire).

B.2 Untitled 1894-1950

Used for work in various locations 1894-1933 including Branscombe, South Devon; Holmwood, Surrey; 'Edenbridge-Westerham (Kent)'; and 'Magdalen Meadow [Oxford] (Fritillaries etc)'.

Contents list on first page.

Loose papers are enclosed including letter, 22 October, no year, and manuscript notes headed 'The Ash as a Forest Tree in the British Isles (B.E.S., U.C.L. 25 February 1950)' and 'Branscombe 12-13 April 1950'.

SECTION C PSYCHOLOGY, C.1-C.12 1919-1937

Tansley developed an interest in psychology during the First World War and was greatly attracted to the work of Sigmund Freud. He published The new psychology and its relation to life in 1920 and studied with Freud in Vienna in 1923-1924.

See also B.65A, D.14, D.23, D.69.

C.1 Notebook 1919-1923

'The New Psychology Press Cuttings Letters'

Notebook into which have been pasted letters and press-cuttings relating to Tansley's book The new psychology and its relation to life, London: Allen & Unwin, 1920.

The letters are from the publisher George Allen & Unwin Ltd and readers of the book and the press-cuttings are reviews of the book from the British and overseas press and professional journals.

The notebook was originally used for plant physiology drawings which may possibly have been student work. Many pages were found loose within the covers.

C.2-C.12 Miscellaneous papers N.d., 1931-1937
